There once was an old lion. He was too old to catch animals for food, so he thought of an idea to feed himself. He put up a public notice outside his den. It said, "Old lion is dying. Pay him a visit before it's too late!" One morning, a hen came by.

Hen: Mr. Lion, how are you doing today?

Lion: I don't feel so good. Come and feel my head. It's so hot that it feels like I'm burning up.

So the hen went into the den and the lion ate it up just like that. After some time, a sheep passed by.

Sheep: Hi, Mr. Lion. I can hear you cough from miles away. Are you okay?

Lion: No. I think I might die any second. Come and check my mouth. It feels like something is stuck at the base of my throat.

So the sheep went into the den and the lion ate it up just like that. Then, more and more animals read the notice and went into the den, and the lion ate them one by one. One day, a fox walked by the den.

Fox: How have you been, Mr. Lion?

Lion: I feel as sick as a dog. Come and feel my legs. They're getting weaker and weaker.

Fox: No, I'm afraid not.

Lion: You cold-hearted fox!

Fox: It's the other way around. I just have sharp eyes. I see the footprints in the mud going in but not out.

The fox turned and left just like that. And no one has visited the lion's den ever since.

More than a hundred years ago, there were no alarm clocks to help people get up early in the morning. Instead, special workers were paid to go around town with bells and hit on doors with sticks. Sometimes, they even threw little rocks at windows to wake people up. Of course, when the alarm clock was invented, those workers were out of jobs.

Another interesting old-time job was the newspaper reader at a factory. That person would read the news out loud so that the factory workers wouldn't feel so bored at work. Again, when the radio came out, it became harder and harder for newspaper readers to keep their jobs.

As you can see, lives became difficult for some people because their jobs were replaced by new inventions. Self-driving cars have just been invented, and drivers might lose their jobs soon. Who says that technology always makes life easier?
