Word Museum

Did you know the meaning of a word may change over time? Many English words we know had different meanings a long time ago. One example is the word nice.

Around the year 1300, nice was first used in English to mean "stupid." Two hundred years later, nice began to carry a "better" meaning. If people said a book was written nicely, they meant the book was written "clearly" or "carefully," not "stupidly." After 1800, nice began to take its modern meanings like "kind" or "friendly." Since then, people have thought of nice as a word with "good" meanings.

A "good" change of a word's meaning like this example of nice is called AMELIORATION. Though we don't use nice to mean "stupid" any more, it is fun to know how much a word's meaning can change from its start!

*For more example of AMELIORATION, see next page. (👉)

(B) It was first used in English 1100.
(C) It still meant “friendly” around 1300.
(D) It was used to talk about an important person around 1800.
44. Here are four sentences from the Word Museum. Which is most likely(可能) to appear on the next page?
- (A) The word silly used to mean “happy,” but now it means “stupid.”
(B) The word terrific used to(過去常常) mean “terrible,” but now it means “excellent.”
(C) The word girl used to mean “young person,” but now it means “a young woman.”
(D) The word telephone is cut short to phone, but the two words mean the same thing.

Fri., Nov. 29th

Dear Miss Help,

I’ve been sad and angry for a few days. I think I need your help.

It’s about my classmate, Sunny. I invited her to stay at my home last weekend, and we had a great time. However, I noticed that one of my books was gone. When I talked to Sunny about it this Monday, she said, “I don’t know. Why do you ask me about this?” Last night, I even found a skirt of mine was missing! It was in the closet of the guest room before Sunny stayed there for the weekend. What should I do? Should I ask Sunny about this again? Mother told me to forget about it, but I couldn’t. Please tell me what I can do.

A sad girl,
Bella

Dear Bella,

I know you feel sad about this. I think you can tell Sunny you are looking for that skirt and book again. Just ask her if she accidentally packed them when she left. If she still doesn’t want to talk about it, just trust her and forget it. Your mom is right. Sometimes, forgiving others is the best way.
