When people do some online shopping, most of them may buy a lot of things, but they don't really need them. You can see messages on many shopping websites when you are doing shopping, and these messages often encourage impulse buying.

For example, you don't drink much coffee often, but when you see "Only one coffee machine left!", you think it must be good because it is so popular. When another message appears, like "Twenty other people are looking at this item now!" or "It is on sale just in 24 hours!", you think you need to buy it fast before someone does! So you click the "Buy Now" button. But, do you really need to buy it?

Online stores want your money, and they will try anything to get you to spend it. To stop impulse buying, before you click the "Buy Now" button, ask yourself a few questions: "Do I really need it?", "Do I just want it?" or "What would I use it for?". When you see something and you really want it, think twice before you buy it. Maybe after some time, you won't want it and you will keep your money.
