Tonle Sap is a very big lake in Cambodia. Many people there live on the water. Their houses are not on the land; they are on boats! These are floating villages. When the water level changes, their houses move with the water.

The people on the boats are very busy. They are often fishermen and get food from the lake. The children go to a floating school to study. There is also a market on the water where they buy and sell things. By the way, the library, the police station, the restaurants and even the little farm are all floating on the water.
