A

For centuries, people grew their own food and ate it themselves, and even kept some for the long winter. In some countries, people continue to do this. However, agriculture has changed a lot in the last 100 years. Most people no longer grow their food. They buy it in supermarkets and grocery stores. Thanks to modern agriculture, people around the world can enjoy apples from South Africa, pasta from Italy, pineapples from Costa Rica, and tomatoes from Mexico. They can enjoy different kinds of food without traveling to these places. Instead, the food travels to them.

"Food miles" is the distance that food travels to get to us. For example, a person who lives in Japan may buy kiwi fruit that comes from New Zealand. This kiwi fruit has to travel 5,800 miles to get to this person. Airplanes, ships, trains, and trucks may bring this food. This transportation uses lots of fuel that can cause pollution. To help the food last longer, we have to put some chemicals on it while it travels. These chemicals may be bad for our health.

It's convenient to buy food from all over the world. However, there may be farmers close to you who grow the same food. By choosing local food, you can save energy, improve your health, and help local businesses. As people say, "Eat locally, think globally!"

agriculture 農業；instead 取而代之；transportation 運輸設備

43. In our modern world, most people can't grow all the food they need. What can you do to help decrease energy and keep food healthy and delicious?
- (A) Grow all of your own food.
(B) Buy food that farmers grow in your area.
(C) Buy food with more packaging and processing.
(D) Buy food from far away as possible as you can.
44. Which one is true in the reading?
- (A) It's a good to eat food from far away.
(B) We have to learn "Eat healthily, buy wisely."
(C) There are still many people growing their own food now.
(D) The more "Food miles" is, the better is our environment.

B

During the pandemic, most of the students all over the world had to study at home and took classes online. Many students had to get used to reading digital materials for their classes. For students who are used to reading books and papers in print, reading on a computer screen is a challenge.

What do you think about reading on a computer? The study shows that people learn better and understand more while reading from paper books. With e-books, our brains and eyes have to work harder, so we may not absorb all the information. People who read digital texts often have less understanding than those who read the same texts in print. Though reading from books is better for learning, people won't stop reading digital materials. So, what can we do? When reading for pleasure or checking the news, digital texts are fine. However, if you really need to learn the information well, it's the best to read a book.

Guess what? E-books or books in print (physical books), which one are sold better? You may be surprised to hear this result, physical books still win though e-books are popular and cheaper. How about you? Which one do you like more, old-school prints or new-school e-books?
