Malala Yousafzai is different from any other woman at her age. In 2012, at the age of 15, she was shot in the head because she spoke up for girls in Pakistan and their right to go to school. Luckily, she recovered from that. Malala became a voice for girls' education and then the youngest winner of the Nobel Peace Prize in 2014. After she face problems with getting her own education, she finally did it in the UK in 2017. "Graduating from high school is bittersweet for me," she wrote on Twitter for the first time. "I'm excited about my future, but I know that millions of girls around the world are still out of school and may never get the chance to finish their education." What's next for Malala? She is staying in the UK to continue her education at Oxford. She said, "I want to get my education — a good university education. My dream is to empower myself with education, and then it is a weapon." Malala is working to make her dream come true.

Dear Dr. Ted,

I am under a lot of stress at school. I have so many quizzes and tests that I have to stay up late to prepare for them. I often can't pay attention in class the next day because I am so tired. Sometimes, I just need to get away from my schoolwork and relax. A friend of mine told me that smoking might help because he did it before. He said, "Maybe you should try it." I'm not sure if I should listen to him. Please tell me what to do.

Martin

Dear Martin,

Smoking won't help you at all. In fact, it's very bad for your health. What's worse, if you start smoking, it's possible that you won't be able to stop. Instead, you should get more rest and don't study for too long. After you have enough rest, you will feel good and perform better at school. Also, try talking with your friends and family, exercising, listening to music, and doing other hobbies to relax. Besides, laughing is the best medicine, so you can exchange jokes with your friends every day. Laugh often and others will laugh with you.

Have a healthy life.
