In the old times, poor people were lucky to have goats. They fed on goats' milk and meat. They also made clothes with goats' hair to keep themselves warm. Many farmers now like to keep goats, too. It is much easier to raise goats than all the other animals on the farm. Goats eat grass, leaves, or even kitchen waste. Besides, goats don't need their own home. They can live with other animals on the farm. Some people even follow a horse race tradition. They will take a goat into the stall on the night before the race and let it stay with the horse. It helps the horse stay calm and have a good sleep. If someone takes the goat away, the horse may lose the race next day, and its owner will get angry or not happy.
